In July 1950, a meeting of Yugoslav technicum instructors revised the program of instruction at the Naval Technicum at Rijeka. It was decided to continue the nautical and economic courses and to discontinue the shipping and radio courses. The two courses now in progress have an enrollment of approximately two hundred students. Forty students who formerly attended shipping classes will be placed aboard ships for one year of practical training. The classroom facilities are limited, since the naval school, the mess hall, and the living quarters for some of the students are located in the same building. As a result of the overcrowded conditions, the school functions in two shifts, morning and afternoon.
